AQ: JP 26568/1988: A container sealing device which forms a flange on a paper container with a synthetic resin film being laminated on an inner side thereof and seals a lid made of the same synthetic resin as the laminated film of the container by jointing the lid on the flange, the device including sealing procedures of: heat-sealing the lid to the flange; forming an unjointed portion at a position corresponding to a peeling start position of the lid on an outer circumferential side of the flange; and forming an unjointed portion on an entire circumference or at a position corresponding to the peeling start position of the lid on an inner circumference side of the flange.

With the arrangement described above, the lid can be easily peeled off, and in addition, the laminated film on the inner side of the container can be prevented from being peeled off.
